Not illustrated. 1907 Excerpt: .apart from the exhaustion difficulties already discussed, were made peculiarly difficult by the unavoidable leak from fog chamber to vacuum chamber through the large exhaust cock. It was therefore essential to wait many hours for each observation, since the coronas corresponding to the second, third, etc., of successive exhaustions were smaller than the first. This can not be due to any other cause than the presence of water nuclei from the fog of the first exhaustion. A given corona, moreover, was apt to decrease in aperture as much as one-half during the period of subsidence, showing growth of certain particles at the expense of others, the latter being afterwards detected in the water nuclei specified. This must also be attributed to the continued slow exhaustion due to the leak in question. In table 21 and fig. 31 the earlier data with 4-inch pipes are given, chiefly with the object of direct comparison with foregoing results with 2-inch pipes. The meaning of the data is clear from the earlier tables, and the dp here mentioned is the isothermal value observed at the fog chamber as heretofore. On March 16 to 18 the data are irregular in the way common to observations in a newly adjusted apparatus. The effective nucleation is too small from the presence of interior sources of relatively bulky nuclei. A fairly complete series was undertaken on March 19. The outgoing and incoming branches do not quite coincide, and the data, as a whole, still...
