She sprang out of bed, ashamed to think that Mrs. James was dressed and playing before she had opened her eyes. Aunt Ida said I should not be tardy for Sunday-school, so that it cannot be very late, she told herself. She had almost finished dressing when there was a knock at the door and Mrs. James entered. My method was successful, I see, she said. Did you play that morning hymn just to get me up, auntie? Yes, . I thought that a pleasanter way to rouse a little girl than calling her, or even shaking her! --laughing. If you had not heard and heeded I should have resorted to one or the other. Come now, breakfast is ready, and you will need to go home as soon as it is over, to change your dress I wish we had brought it to my house, then you could have gone direct from here to Sundayschool. I wish I had; but Aunt Jane will want to see that I am all right. How yellow this cream is! I never tasted such good oatmeal before. I ve eaten so much that I shall have to leave the orange, and I hate to! Take it along with you, my dear, and eat it when you feel like it. Good-bye! Tell your aunt that I am coming to see her very soon. Sylvia hastened homeward and in a short time was...
